Many parents of youth with disabilities have a goal that their children will be employed as adults. Unfortunately, statistics show that people with disabilities are often ill prepared for the world of work and experience higher rates of unemployment. This session will provide valuable information to parents that they can use to help prepare youth for employment. Information shared will include the importance of disability self-awareness, the role of “soft skills” in keeping a job, home-based activities to build work skills, understanding employer needs, and knowing available community supports.
